

With an onboard atmosphere that evokes the “Golden Age” of ocean liners, Cunard Line’s two ships (along with a new vessel launching in 2010) specialize in transAtlantic voyages that capitalize on the company’s long history and British feel. At the same time, its ships are both recently built and feature all the modern amenities expected by today’s cruise audience.

As the second-largest cruise line in the world, Royal Caribbean aims to deliver the vacation of a lifetime to all its customers. The line offers eight of the largest ships in the world, with its latest launch accommodating upwards of 5,400 passengers. While the ships are large, innovative deck plans and expansive public spaces promote an open and inviting experience.

As Celebrity Cruises enters a new era of larger ships and higher capacity, don't mourn just yet for the little cruise line offering personalized service. After all, no one believed that Celebrity could maintain its standards with the birth of its Millennium-class ships, and it managed quite nicely, adding a series of enhancements that pleased even the most stalwart Celebrity smaller-ship fans.

It's true, though, that both of Celebrity's new ships—Solstice and Equinox—will come in at 118,000 tons, bigger than even the largest ships in Carnival's fleet. Debuting in 2008 and 2009 respectively, these two ships aim to rock the notion that a cruise line positioning itself in the "premium" market must keep its ships small and cozy. (Both are about 30 percent larger than the line's Millennium-class ships.) What's even more surprising about this aggressive new-build program is that both ships are post-Panamax, meaning they will be unable to transit the Panama Canal—and thus also unable to transition between the Caribbean and Alaska, two of Celebrity's itinerary staples.

The Holland America line of ships delivers a premium cruising experience for its customers. Onboard, ships feature traditional decor including dark woods, original artwork, and elaborate atriums. And while refined decor and upscale amenities attract mostly tradition-minded passengers, a range of new offerings and fleet-wide enhancements now broaden the line's customer base.

CRYSTAL CRUISES

The difference is Crystal clear.

Crystal Cruises offers an intriguing hybrid style of cruise experience. The line is decidedly upscale, but its ships, unlike its luxury niche competitors, are big ones, each carrying 940 or more passengers. Founded in 1990, Crystal has two ships in its fleet: the 940-passenger Crystal Symphony and the 1,080-passenger Crystal Serenity, which introduced new Crystal signature features. These include a sushi bar; second paddle tennis court; boardroom with wine cellar; and indoor/outdoor pool (in addition to the standard centerpiece pool). Fantasia, the children's facility, is state-of-the-art, and keynote facilities, such as the Computer University@Sea and the spa, have been expanded. And 85 percent of its oceanview cabins have balconies.

Seabourn Cruise Line is part of Carnival Corporation, whose seven cruise lines are members of the "World's Leading Cruise Lines" marketing group. Seabourn markets its ships as "The Yachts of Seabourn," and the ultra luxury ships do in fact feel like private yachts; or, more aptly, private clubs. The 208-passenger sister ships Seabourn Legend, Seabourn Pride, and Seabourn Spirit are nearly identical, and all create an intimate environment where wealthy passengers can unwind with their peers, enjoy fine dinner cuisine and solicitous service, and visit exotic ports around the world.
